

Self-insured solutions for employers of all sizes

Providing choice, flexibility, and savings

Self-insured plans are no longer just for large groups. Many employers are considering a shift to self-insured medical plans as a way to better manage health care costs. If you're thinking about a self-insured option, Medica has a variety of solutions for groups of all sizes.

With a self-insured plan, employers have more control over their health benefits and can minimize their short and long-term plan expenses. In addition, taxes and assessments are significantly lower than a fully insured plan.

Self-insured options

TRADITIONAL

Many large employers, generally with more than 100 eligible employees, choose to self-insure with Medica. We offer significant flexibility in plan design, product and provider network.

TRADITIONAL WITH MODERATE RISK APPROACH

Employers with more than 40 or more subscribers have the option to include the Moderate Risk Approach, which includes a one or two-year aggregate and stop-loss commitment and funding approach, that brings predictability to monthly claim costs. When claims are higher than expected, employers receive an advance from Medica to cover the additional expense. These advances are then returned to Medica when claims experience is favorable. And when claims are lower than expected, employers benefit from a favorable cash flow surplus.

MAXIMUM LIABILITY

Employers with enough eligible employees can also self-insure with Medica. With similarities to a fully insured plan option, employers get the benefit of predictable monthly payments offered through a choice of plan designs.

About self-insurance

With a Medica self-insured plan, employers are responsible for their claims costs. In addition, employers pay a monthly administrative fee to Medica for services including claims processing, customer service, network, pharmacy and health management programs. Employers are also responsible for paying the PCORI (Patient-Centered Outcomes Research Institute) fees. This is different from fully insured plans where the monthly premium paid by the employer covers all health plan costs.

Most self-insured employers choose to purchase stop-loss insurance. Stop-loss insurance offers protection from unpredictable plan losses and minimizes overall financial risk.

- Specific stop-loss insurance provides protection against unpredictable or catastrophic claims on any one individual.
- Aggregate stop-loss insurance provides a maximum on the total dollars paid by the employer during a contract period.

Fully Insured and Self-insured Plans. What are the differences?

If you're new to self-insurance, there are several differences from a fully insured plan, including:

	FULLY INSURED MEDICAL PLANS	SELF-INSURED MEDICAL PLANS
Costs	Paid as a fixed monthly premium	Large group self-insured - Payment of monthly administrative fee (fixed costs) and claim costs, stop loss premiums (fixed costs) and weekly claims (variable costs) Small group maximum liability - Payment of all monthly fixed costs, which include pre-funded monthly aggregate claims liability, administrative fee, and stop-loss premiums
Regulatory Oversight	State	Federal
Regulatory Compliance	Shared responsibility between Employer and Medica	Employer responsibility
Plan Privacy	Shared responsibility between Employer and Medica	Employer responsibility
Claim Appeals and Reviews	Medica	Employer appoints Medica to serve as named claim and appeals fiduciary
